I'm an information systems security and open source consultant, based in Sydney, Australia. I primarily consult to corporate and government clients, as well as writing and delivering training courses to the public and corporate clients in Australia, S.E. Asia and Europe. I also write technical articles for various publications.

For over ten years, I've been using commercial groupware products, particularly Lotus Notes/Domino. However, I stumbled across Tiki and have used it in a couple of situations, most notably my current pro bono project, which is a sophisticated intranet for my daughter's school (see http://ffps.lesbell.com.au/pandc/schoolserver/ (Java required)).

I'm particularly interested in applying Tiki to e-learning and instructional delivery, as well as technical support applications.
